STATEMENT:

I am running for State House Representative because I am an Alaskan who is concerned with the erosion of freedom and liberty and the floundering economy. I am seeking to represent the downtown Anchorage area for the opportunity to apply simple common sense solutions to our state's problems.

Individual sovereignty and personal liberty are being threatened as never before seen in the history of our country. Our freedom is under attack by inept federal bureaucracy and big government politicians. I will work to take back lost liberty and preserve freedom for generations to come. As a constitutional conservative, I will wield the 10th Amendment to restore our state sovereignty fighting to limit, negate, and nullify overreaching federal authority and emerging world governance.

As Alaskans, we also face internal threats to our individual sovereignty and personal liberty. Projected budget shortfalls threaten to introduce new state taxes. As your representative, I will oppose any and all new taxes. The state of Alaska simply spends too much money. Cutting non-essential spending is a simple common sense approach to solving this problem. Another issue the state faces is the decline in production volume of our natural resources. I will support legislation to make Alaska more competitive at attracting business by working to reform the current oil and gas tax structure. New royalties from additional natural resource development will create the additional revenue stream to close the budget gaps.

My name is Cris Eichenlaub, Jr., and I look forward to serving you in Juneau.
