Position Statement:

Alaska has a bright future ahead of its current financial conundrum, and that hurdle can be resolved. It requires a person of resolute, foresight, perspective, and a willingness to make the hard decisions. I have those proven leadership skills to break the cycle that continues to prevent Alaska from exiting the current recession, its lack of growth, and rampant crime rate which is affecting all. With growth come jobs. With jobs, employees stop fighting with each other. With jobs, employers fight for employees. When employers fight for employees, wages go up. To do this we need the private sector to create jobs now and for the future of all Alaskans. We must not tax the job creators or over regulate them out of business. Over taxing the job creators or the people, to resolve the feckless spending or growing the size of government by the legislators is not the answer to the States current fiscal dilemma. If we follow the proven principles of Reganomics, Alaska will thrive for all generations to come. We will able to provide the much-needed assistance to our aging population. If we follow the four pillars of Reganomics there would be no reason to tap into the people's fund, (PFD). If we follow the concept of fiscal conservatism we can better educate our children for a brighter and more productive community. If we follow conservative principles together we can do what is right and just for the people.
