Position Statement

Our state business model since 1980 has been based on the expectation that a significant volume of oil, at a budget sustainable price, will consistently flow through our pipeline year after year. However, as we have experienced over the past several years, oil price volatility creates major budget uncertainty and is a financial condition we must be prepared to effectively manage. That requires fiscal discipline along with a willingness to save some of our recent financial gains through deposits into the Alaska Permanent Fund or into other state savings accounts. Essential government functions need to be identified, prioritized, and then appropriately supported. How we balance state spending to meet our essential needs and reasonable wants will remain our annual challenge now and for years to come.

Despite federal government actions designed to limit our ability as a state to fully develop our natural resources, Alaska has a bright future if Alaskans vote into office pro-growth leadership. My four years in office from 2019-2022 established my record as a fiscal conservative who knew how to balance state spending with anticipated revenues while investing in public safety, education and in the general welfare of all Alaskans. My 42-year Alaska banking career, prior service on the Fairbanks Board of Education and four years of experience as a House Finance Committee member has prepared me to meet the economic challenges our state faces today and into the future.

I would appreciate your vote on November 5th.
