OTHER:

My time is primarily spent with my family and working on starting a small-acreage homestead. My family lives modestly, and we produce as much of our own food as we can. We try to live by the old Alaskan mode of doing work for ourselves rather than hiring it out.

STATEMENT:

I do not want to hold office. I know this might sound strange. I personally believe that only those who do not wish to be in politics should be elected, so when I was asked to run by several friends and colleagues I found I could not in good conscience decline. I do not see public office as a benefit to my own life and would rather spend my time out of the public eye, however if I am elected I will do my absolute best to work for the benefit of Alaska and my constituents.

This country is in a developing state of crisis, and by extension Alaska is also. It is not popular to say so, but there is a time of great pain coming: economic, spiritual, and corporeal. Our Federal overlords would see us in new and devastating wars, our central bank has brought us economic cancer through inflation and debt, and by relying on out of state food Alaska finds itself uniquely vulnerable. We need to stop spending money on foolish programs, give Alaskans the money they are OWED, and open up the land to be lived on and developed. In this way we can find new strength as a state, that we might weather the coming storms.

The young see very little in the future that is worth working towards. It is up to us, the older generations responsible, to create a future that gives them hope and meaning.
